

CSUR's Environment Day (Oct 10th, 2019)

Headlines & discussions regarding climate change and the environment dominate the news on a regular and daily basis. In keeping with Canada's mandate of responsible development of our resources, CSUR organized a session to highlight some of the key aspects and challenges that affect development within the unconventional resource sector.

The objective for the day was to touch on any and all relevant facets of this rather broad topic, including regulations, policies, processes, tools and communications. The attendees heard from representatives of various government agencies, experts in the field of stakeholder engagement, water management specialists and other environmental professionals.

The event was held at the 801 Seventh Conference Center. The facility boasts an intimate theater setting that allowed for significant dialogue and information exchange during the 4 thematic sessions at this full day seminar. The various speakers & moderators shared their knowledge, ideas & even personal experiences and readily engaged with the participants throughout the day in order to promote an informative and collaborative atmosphere. Interesting and thought-provoking examples of contrasting business environments between local (Canadian) and various US jurisdictions were also discussed, specifically concerning water management strategies & policies.

The overall feedback from attendees / presenters was extremely positive and they considered the event worthwhile!
